The discussion dragged along for some time, and the members of the convention were getting more and more confused as to what the language of the "platform" rules really meant, when General Sewell, of New Jersey, cut the gordian knot with a motion to adopt the ... which was unanimously agreed to.

The chair called for the report of the committee on credentials, as the next order of business.

Hoar, of Michigan, moved that recess be taken until 8 o'clock to-night.

Agreed to, and at 2:10 the convention adjourned.

Night Session.

Chicago, June 20.—The uppermost thought in the mind of the convention as it begins to reassemble this evening is the supreme importance of the action taken this afternoon in adopting the report of the committee on rules, which includes a rule that no change can be made after the vote of a state has been properly cast until the ballot has been announced. This virtually stops any stampede—very decidedly opposite to the deliberate character of convention proceedings. It is regarded as a very decided victory for the influences which are opposed to the programme of those managers who are seeking to nominate Blaine. Col. Thos. Boyne of Pennsylvania, who was a member of the committee on rules and who has always been a sincere Blaine man, said after the convention adjourned to-day that the action of the committee in allowing this ... to be incorporated in the rules was one of the wisest and most important actions taken so far. It renders a hasty Blaine movement out of the question, and adds strength to the friends of Blaine who do not desire his nomination unless the convention cannot, after an honest and sincere and long continued effort, decide between the other candidates.

Some expectation was indulged in by many of those who came to the hall this evening that a ballot might be taken before adjournment, but no one who understands the situation had any idea the proceedings would go so far for under the same [illegible] the committee on credentials committee must report, all its work be disposed of and the platform adopted before any further business even the nomination of candidates can be proceeded with.

...ATTING FOR THE REPORT.

Dixon, colored, of Maryland, offered a resolution of respect to the memory of Grant and Logan, ex-President Arthur and the late Senator Conkling, which was also adopted by a rising vote.

The chair then asked for the report of the committee on credentials.

Henderson, of Iowa, announced that Chairman Hepburn of that committee was not present, and the secretary of the convention proceeded to call time by announcing telegrams received for delegates, after which a band in the gallery proceeded to put in the time until the credentials committee would be ready to report.

The chairman again called upon the committee on credentials and again received no response. He then called upon the committee on resolutions, but Holmes, of North Carolina, stated that the committee was not ready to report and would not be before to-morrow.

Hallowell of Kansas, amid the most enthusiastic outburst of enthusiasm that has been seen in the convention, moved that Governor Foraker, of Ohio, be asked to address the convention. The motion was agreed to, and

and received with a volley of cheers and ... applause for the honor conferred upon him. He said he would greatly have preferred if he had not been called upon. The question has been asked: "What are we here for?" Republicans were here to formulate republican principles; they were here to nominate the next president of the United States. [Applause.] The first ... was easy to do. Every ... boy knew what the declaration of the convention would be. Every democrat as well as republican knew what the attitude of the republican party was with respect to the questions which concerned the American people. Republicanism is sincere for a free ballot and a fair count, and will not hesitate to say so in all the timber we can put in the platform. We believe in a protective tariff and that the present democratic administration is a fraud and pretense. We want a change, and we are determined to have one. We believe Cleveland's free trade ... is fraught with danger. We want to take care of American labor, American homes and American industries. And we will say so. Then we will nominate our candidate. I don't know who he will be. [A voice in the gallery: "Gresham," and cheers.] Governor Foraker continued: I don't know what his name is, [a voice, "Foraker," cheers], but I can say he will be a gentleman. [Continued cheers.] That was saying a great deal in view of recent experience.

Henderson, of Iowa, broke in with the declaration that the nominee would not go fishing on Decoration day.

Continuing, Foraker said the nominee would be one of good moral character, and would have some special standing in the community. He would not only be a man to cherish patriotic occasions, but would have a record as a republican that would be without spot or blemish. He would take the republican standard in his hand and carry it to victory in the name of republicanism, without explanation or apology to anybody; and when once elected it would be his highest business to give the country a republican administration. [Applause.] He would not do it for false pretenses. He would go straight at the mark. In conclusion he said: We can catch up the glorious refrain that comes from ... and ... is sweeping ... the whole country with a magnificent tri... which will knock Grover Cleve... and the bandana into innocuous ... and the long continued ... [Loud and long continued applause and cheers.]

Heller of North Carolina, moved that Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll be asked to make an address, but the committee on credentials being ready to report, the regular order was proceeded with.

CREDENTIALS REPORT.

The chairman of the credentials committee then advanced to the platform and made his report. The report, among other recommendations, favors the admission of the Wise district delegates from Virginia and favors Mahone delegates at large.

Russell, of North Carolina, from the committee on credentials, presented the minority report which dissents from the majority report in favor of the admission of Wise delegates from the Second, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Tenth districts, who, it is claimed, were elected by the regular and the Third was a fraud and ... on the Wood delegates on the ... to be, if possible, the district ... or was not held within the ... bounds of the district was neither just ... or legal.

John S. Wise then took the floor and was cheered with applause. He said when the gentleman from North Caro... as Russell spoke of the gentleman who would be the contest as one who might ... a ... shop he did not con... himself to the facts of the case. Petersburg who was the rival contestant, was the peer of the gentleman from North Carolina or any other gentleman here. This meeting was not held at a ... shop but in a reputable place, ... [illegible] had been held for years. He did not come here to be ... a ... shop. He Wise had seconded the mo... from to admit both delegates because republicans from Virginia, recognizing the Ninth as the banner district of Virginia republicanism, loving its people whether they came here under the banner of Mahone or Wise, it grieved him to see her unrepresented in the convention. [Applause.]

Ross of Missouri arose to move the ... section, but the chair declined to recognize him, and Moore of West Virginia addressed the convention upon the Ninth district dispute. He thought the convention in danger if it admitted the Ninth district delegates of setting a dangerous precedent.

Allen of West Virginia followed in favor of the minority report. He declared if the majority report was adopted his place as delegate at large from Virginia would be valueless to him.

At 11:32 p. m. the convention adjourned to 10 a. m. to-morrow.

Review of the Situation.

Chicago, June 20.—Everybody is waiting for the first ballot. The coterie of men who are standing together and trying to keep things in good shape hope to finish the nominating speeches to-morrow and get a ballot to-morrow night. Before the ballot has been taken there will be no material changes in position. Depew's friends are not doing much by him. James Husted and ex-Collector Robertson are about the only men who are making a serious effort to promote the Depew movement. Depew will be voted for probably not more than two or three ballots. The climax is to come when New York breaks up, and on New York's choice after Depew the nomination may depend. At this time there is not a very good feeling. Many delegates feel that the Depew candidacy was a blunder, destroying the only chance New York had of uniting on a candidate. The said, exceed, and thus exercising a controlling influence. It will be impossible to unite New York on another candidate. About half the delegation are likely to go to Harrison, Hiscock favors the Indianan and Platt is about to give up Alger and join Hiscock. Phelps of New Jersey and Elkins are in the Harrison ... Warner Miller is still inclined to Sherman, and if Depew should join him the delegation would split in two parts of about equal strength for Sherman and Harrison, with scattering votes for other candidates.

While no absolute pledges have been made, New Jersey, Maryland and parts of New England are for Harrison, and he will show up strongly after the complimentary ballots are finished. At the same time Harrison is losing rather than gaining strength on the discussion of availability or voting-getting qualities, which is now so general. It is seen that the predominating thought of the convention is to get a man who can be elected. A large number of organized labor men from Indianapolis and other cities are here favoring Gresham. The latter is now called the "tin pail" candidate. Some of the strongest influences in the country are at work for Harrison. It is conceded he has the best corps of political workers in the field. The influence, energy and adroitness of such men as Elkins, New and Duffey are not to be despised, aided as they are by Senator Hiscock and Wm. Walter Phelps.

The Harrison campaigners made their first mistake this morning. Up to this time they had handled the situation in their own state with great style. Though it has been known to insiders that the Indiana delegation while apparently solid for Harrison has within it eight or ten Gresham men, the Harrison managers by letting the Gresham delegates alone and carefully avoiding all formal controversy had succeeded in convincing the convention that the state was solid for their man. To-day they made the blunder of calling the Indiana delegation together and attempting to pass a resolution to the effect that Indiana should vote solidly for Harrison until the majority indicated a wish to change to another. This resolution was received with much disfavor. Some of the Gresham men present declared that they would not be bound by the resolution if it passed, and it being apparent that the Gresham men and conservative delegates opposed to the unit rule were in the majority the resolution was withdrawn. Thus by the blunder the Harrison men have made it apparent that Indiana is not solid for Harrison, and the moral ... at least is with the opposition. One of the cards on which the Gresham managers have been relying is a break in the Indiana fold, and if they should spring this on the convention simultaneous with a change of Wisconsin from Rusk to Gresham it might start a stampede to the latter.

That the selection of Estee as chairman was the result of an agreement, that in consideration of this honor California was to abandon her Blaine boom, became more than ever apparent in the convention to-day, when Estee indicated

R. W. STREET,
Manager of the GAZETTE.

The Times is finding it up-hill work urging Depew on the people of Colorado.

Last week it looked as though Starr, mau might get the nomination, but men who are urging the nomination of Blaine have decreed his defeat.

Gresham has been second in the race for the last month for the nomination for president. Thurston, the temporary chairman, in speaking of the different candidates, ignored him entirely. Thurston has emphasized the criticisms on him as a railroad attorney by snubbing in so open a way one of the strongest men before the convention.

The politicians of Indiana are determined to kill off Judge Gresham. Already several thousand of them have come to Chicago to try and impress the delegates that the people are all for Harrison. But the tone of the press and the action of recent county republican conventions in Indiana show that Gresham is really a great favorite with the people, and would run better than Harrison. In one county the vote in a republican convention, on a resolution favoring Gresham for the presidency, was one hundred and thirteen for Gresham, out of one hundred and fifteen votes. Senator Thompson, who represents three counties in the southern part of Indiana, says that at least nineteen twentieths of the republicans in southern Indiana favor Gresham. In a republican convention in Lake county, at which five hundred farmers were present, a resolution was adopted regarding Harrison and Gresham which closes as follows: "That while our hearts are big enough to love them both and our pride in them exalted enough to honor both, yet we believe there is an imperative demand by the country at large for the nomination of our great jurist, Walter Q. Gresham." Sons of great men ought to be able to know great men when they see them. Robert Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, Walker Blaine and Fred Grant are all for Gresham.

At its last meeting the Arkansas State Medical society requested religious newspapers not to publish advertisements of quacks. The medical society in this state has been requested to take like action. It is a subject that is well worth agitating. Our religious newspapers all pretend to have a high standard of morals and all are published purely for the moral and religious education of their readers. Yet it is a fact that religious newspapers on an average are less particular about their advertising than respectable publications which do not pretend to be more than newspapers. Many of these advertisements are highly immoral. It is to be presumed that the advertisers would not continue to publish them if they did not draw attention and business. These religious newspapers, therefore, are aiding unscrupulous adventurers in their vicious practices. These newspapers publish them for pay and are therefore, we may say, bribed to help those who do wrong. It would be far more respectable if this was done for nothing and published with the religious news and exhortations: "without money and without price." At first it was thought that these advertisements were published innocently but the attention of the editors of religious newspapers has been brought to this subject many times, and there is no excuse on the score of ignorance. They are published simply for the money that they bring. The editorial and publisher'sdepartment of the newspaper should never be separated. The paper cannot denounce lotteries and publish lottery advertisements, and the paper cannot publish religious exhortations in one column and in another be the tool of swindlers.

BERLIN ACTRESSES.

Ornaments of the German Theatres and their Artistic Careers.

BERLIN, June 7, 1888

One of the most renowned actresses, not only of Germany but also of Austria and Russia—she is well known in America, too—is Frau Hedwig Niemann-Raabe. She is rather small in stature, with regular features, and even in her youth, could not have been said to be beautiful, although she has many ardent admirers of her physical charms. She is a faithful mother and a loving wife. Her husband is the celebrated tenor Albert Niemann, and for many years they were the best representatives of German art in their respective departments.

The Niemanns have acquired a large fortune on the stage, and now live in a fine house in the fashionable quarter of the city near the Thiergarten. Gossip says that Frau Niemann rules at home that her husband is sometimes too convival, comes home very late, and on these occasions, often finds the door firmly shut and locked against him.

On the threshold of her theatric career, Frau Niemann had to surmount many obstacles. When sixteen she began to act at Hamburg chiefly in servant girl parts, under Cheri Maurice, the Nestor of German managers. She gave no promise of talent then. "You are a goose and a good for nothing," exclaimed the state manager on a certain occasion "you can't make a good servant girl even." He who had discovered so many stars in I. showed himself to be one of the most commonplace of theatrical managers of the age, failed to divine the genius hidden in the young breast of Hedwig Niemann. But the young girl was not disheartened. She labored all the harder and has gained her reputation to-day for Frau Niemann [illegible] the rest.

It is rather strange that another Frau Niemann is connected with the GAZETTE. Frau Niemann Seebach the first wife of Albert Niemann was [illegible] many years ago, secretly and to the great sorrow of her former husband and she was unknown in the United States, but appeared in many of the Am[illegible]

Fraulein Seebach was [illegible] to be the wife of Albert Niemann. And this is the way that marriage [illegible] was brought about. Both were [illegible] same stage in Hanover. Frau [illegible] Mary, wife of Lind[illegible] who considered herself an [illegible] maker, decided in her own mind that these talented young artists ought to be man and wife, and so the wedding was performed by royal order as well as [illegible] royalty beheld in Germany.

The only happy result of the unfortunate marriage was the birth of a son who seems to have inherited the talent of both of his parents, or at least the mighty stature of his father and the genial disposition of his mother. He is soon to make his debut on the stage and great things are expected of him.

Fraulein Schwarz, also belonging to the Royal theatre, takes the part of Joan of Arc, Mary [illegible] and many other heroines of Schiller and Shakespeare. She is an actress of great power, feeling and gravity, and an honor to our stage.

While supping with her recently she related to me the following amusing incident:

"Some time ago I was to appear at Linz, in Austria, as Desdemona in Shakespeare's Othello. I was then in the habit of rehearsing in my room, and as I sat one night in my hotel going through the strangulation scene in the last act, doing my best to imitate the sound of throttling, I heard a great hubbub at my door. As, wrapt up in my part, I exclaimed:

"'O banish me, my lord, but kill me not!'

"Somebody shouted from without:

"'Open the door!'

"I continued:

"'Kill me to-morrow; let me live to-night.'

"I went on pleading in the tenderest tones that I could command. The response came:

"'We'll break in the door if you do not open it forthwith!'

"'But while I say one prayer,' I began again.

"At this point there was a tremendous crash, the door burst from its hinges, and in rushed a motley crowd of half-dressed guests, the terrified landlord and half-a-dozen waiters, armed with brooms, pokers and the like. It appears that a rather simple-minded and timid old gentleman, who had a room next my own, was aroused from his sleep by my recitation, and imagining that an awful crime was being committed, had awakened the whole house. The most disagreeable part of the whole thing to me was that the vexed landlord insisted upon my quitting his hotel, and the next day I had to seek quarters elsewhere."

The artless maiden, the ingenue of our stage, is Clara Meyer. In former years she was one of the loveliest girls, with charming ways, tender feelings, great soul and sympathetic voice. Even to-day, although no longer young and pretty, she is raved over by many of our sentimental maidens, carried away by the fascinating charms of the clever actress.

As Gretchen, Juliet, Clarchen (in Goethe's Egmont), Ophelia and Hero, Clara Meyer is unsurpassed. But like Fraulein Seebach she had a hard struggle before the public would recognize her talents. It is reported that her first manager said to her very roundly on one occasion: "You have no best for the theatrical professions you would do well to quit the stage forthwith." She never forgot those cruel words, and when, at the height of her success, this same manager, poor in purse and broken in health, came to her for assistance, she had to struggle with herself before she could receive him kindly, and when he stammered out: "Didn't I always tell you, my dear, that one day you would reach the highest round of this professional ladder?" Clara Meyer's generous impulses were almost turned to hate.

That Clara Meyer has a noble self-sacrificing nature is proved in other ways than by her kind treatment of her decrepit manager, as this story of her early love shows. It is well known that a gentleman of high birth, captivated by the actress' fine looks and genial disposition, wished to marry her, but [illegible] ed this brilliant offer on the ground that she did not wish to ruin the man's social position by making the partner of his life "only a princess of the stage."

The "ladys" of the Royal theatre, Frau Kahle Kessler, an accomplished actress, whose manners are as superb as her dresses. Many a high born dame envies the aristocratic appearance, the stately carriage and remarkable conversational powers of the [illegible] [illegible] ter in Germany of the modern society drama, whose success or failure depends almost wholly on the skill of the actors.

Fraulein Kessler married Herr Kahle one of the prominent members of the troop of the Royal theatre. Like Frau Niemann Seebach she came to Berlin from Hanover where her talents were highly appreciated by the [illegible] family. In fact she might have acted [illegible] not an unimportant [illegible] interest of the dethroned [illegible] her conception of [illegible] lofty.

[illegible] in Nirmannsee was taken upon [illegible] [illegible] domestic who made [illegible] her to become a spy upon [illegible] of the Guelph family and [illegible] the historian of King [illegible] throne of his father. [illegible] who had taken the oath of [illegible]

[illegible] Prince [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Saulsbury's Troubadours, who appear at the opera house, next Friday evening, is one of the strongest comedy combinations on the road. An exchange, in speaking of their new play, says: "The Humming Bird," a farcical trifle in three acts bristling with merriment but without an atom of vulgarity. There is only the merest suggestion of a plot in "The Humming Bird," but there is not a dull moment in it. It affords a vehicle for harmless fun and local hits, and is so full of dash and go that a plot is almost unnecessary. A gentleman happens to be caught kissing his pretty servant by his wife, an advertisement is inserted in the herald appointing a meeting with an unknown lady in Central park, a theatrical advertisement is inserted by another party for a meeting with a prospective star at the same place, the husband and wife, study friend, a stage struck lady's maid and an impecunious theatrical manager are mixed up in an apparently inextricable maze of cross purposes, and it is the unraveling of this social snarl that affords the actors in "The Humming Bird" scope for their talents. Altogether, "The Humming Bird" is a mirth-producer of a regular "hummer," and will no doubt attract large audiences for some time.
